A Visit to a Library

I was only five years old when my mother took me to a library in Connaught Place. Since I was very young, I hardly knew where she was taking me. The moment I stepped inside the library, I was amazed to see hundreds of books kept in racks. Then my mother took me to the kids' section. In that section, books were kept in small shelves and there were many soft toys kept in the room. The books were colourful and had many pictures on them. My mother helped me read a book. Other kids were also going through some books. Some children were very small to understand anything, they kept on pulling one book after another from the rack. They turned the pages and screamed with joy when they found some interesting pictures. Later, my mother told me to choose some books from the rack which I would like to read over the week. I did what she said and since then I fell in love with the library because it gave me the opportunity to read so many books of different kinds.
